

Sustaining All Life works to remove barriers to building a large and powerful movement to address the climate crisis. These barriers include:

- longstanding divisions (caused by oppression, and especially racism and classism) between nations and between groups of people,
- widespread feelings that it's too late and any actions will be ineffective,
- denial of or failure to engage with the climate emergency,
- difficulties in effectively addressing the connections between the climate crisis and the failures of our economic system.